Common Sense Economics for Legislators is a nonpartisan program of the Hammond Institute and the Economic Education Center designed to help legislators engage voters about economics. Its aim is to improve voters' understanding of the modern world while helping lawmakers engage constituents in meaningful conversations about economics and personal finance. Participants include lawmakers, staff, and others involved in the legislative process.

Participants receive a copy of Common Sense Economics (St. Martin's Press, 2016), continental breakfast, and lunch, plus a ticket to "Is the Constitution Still Relevant?" with Dr. Walter Williams at Lindenwood University's Scheidegger Event Center. Additional tickets are available at $20 each.

The four conversation themes cover key economic concepts such as scarcity, gains from trade, marginal decision-making, supply and demand, profits and losses, economic growth, and the invisible hand.

Theme I: Twelve Key Elements of Economics

Theme II: Seven Major Sources of Economic Progress

Theme III: Economic Progress and the Role of Government

Theme IV: Twelve Key Elements of Practical Personal Finance
